Why I chose these elements

For this report, I chose to loosely follow the TRUESEC agreement. Therefore, I made my own section with the parties involved and formatted it to include the locations of operations and the addresses of the companies. Since there are different laws in different countries, I found it important to include where the operations are being conducted.

Under the Rules of Engagement section, each subsection I found important for liability reasons and for clarity reasons. The scope and purpose of the agreement outline what is actually being worked and ensure that I have a specific set of goals to actually work and don't do more or less than required. I need to be sure I know what machines I can and can't access, who I can and can't access, and what different technologies are within the scope of the test. The testing section is also similar to the scope section as it outlines what I can and can't do with the technologies outlined in the scope section. The other sections such as data protection and compliance are more for legal purposes to ensure all rules of engagement are followed.
